ALEX JENNINGS is resting all right today. How the gun came to explode is as much a mystery to him as to anyone. The accident was indeed a peculiar one, and it is fortunate that the young man did not lose his life, as he would have done had the muzzle of the gun been one inch away from where it was when the gun discharged itself. It was a new gold district up Provo canyon, five claims in which a few men have quietly been working on all summer. The assays so far obtained are not high, but the prospects are said to be very promising, so much so that the owners are going ahead on the mines with development work determined not to stop till the rich ore is struck. The district is called the Gold Hill district.

Old man Osterloh forgot himself just a little yesterday and took a little grog aboard. As a result of some sort of disturbance at home, Mr. Osterloh came down town and swore to a complaint charging her spouse with drunkenness. The old man went before Justice Wedgwood and gave bonds in the sum of $15.00 to appear for trial at 10 o'clock this forenoon. At that hour he appeared, and from the evidence adduced the judge felt constrained to discharge the old gentleman from custody, which was done, it appearing that at no time during the entire day was he unreasonably drunk. The disturbance was matter for a divorce court, not a police court.

NOT SETTLED YET.

Judge Bartholomew has the Mandamus Case under advisement and hearing of Petitions for Writs of Prohibition is on Twenty Witnesses Yet to Hear.

The arguments in the mandamus case of J. D. Page, C. H. Larsen and J. L. Jolly against the Utah commission were resumed yesterday morning before Judge Bartholomew. Attorney P. L. Williams concluded his address and was followed by Judge Powers for the defendants and Attorney John M. Zane closed for the petitioners, concluding his argument about 3:30 p. m., after which the court took it under advisement. Then the three petitions for writs of prohibition, to prevent the members of the Utah commission from canvassing the ballots in the ballot boxes or from going behind the tally sheet to determine the results of the election of delegates to the constitutional convention, were commenced.

The petitioners in this case were Page, Larsen and Jolly, the same as in the mandamus proceedings. The counsel for the petitioners put in the evidence of Commissioner Talbot as given in the mandamus cases and then proceeded to examine witnesses from Sanpete county who had officiated as judges at the several precincts. Attorney P. L. Williams objected to the admission of testimony of this kind on the ground that it was foreign to the issue in question. Judge Bartholomew ruled the evidence might be admitted for the present subject to the objection. Six witnesses were examined and from their testimony it would appear that the election in Sanpete county had been conducted in a very slipshod manner and so far as appearance goes, it would be a most difficult matter to state with any degree of certainty which candidate had received the highest number of votes and were entitled to take seats in the convention.

There are about twenty more witnesses of the same kind to be examined in three cases, so that the proceedings are likely to last several days yet.

The Mulvaney's.

From the S. L. Herald.

The Mulvaney's are strange people, very strange people. Immediately after Mrs. Mulvaney's bond was signed, the husband repaired with all the ardor of a Romeo to his wife at the Templeton hotel, where she had been staying and for a day or two spent most of his time there. Then Mrs. Mulvaney gave up her rooms at the Templeton and joined her husband at his quarters in the Knutsford, and apparently the two resumed marital relations of a more than agreeable kind. But the strangest part of the business is that a few days ago Mulvaney and his wife drove to the penitentiary to visit "Nurse" Charley Valentine. The reconciliation between the wronged husband and the gay Lothario was complete, they fell on each other's necks and wept, and Mulvaney expressed his sorrow that Charley had to live in the penitentiary and promised to do all he could to get him out. Mrs. Mulvaney took a hand in the general expressions of good will and was even more demonstrative in her affections towards Charley than her husband had been. On Wednesday a second visit was paid by the Mulvaney's to the nurse, this time conveying to Charley choice flowers and changes of raiment. This seemed too much for Mulvaney, for yesterday he was missing and was nowhere to be found. So he was hunting for him high and low, out and in lawyers' offices, in the court rooms and all around, but at last accounts the missing hubby's whereabouts was unknown.
